“ I don't remember too much about him.. I was young when I lost him, and it was pretty bad.. I remember he was really amazing, and he made me really happy. I still think about him often, despite it almost being 10 years since then. The thing is, he always wanted me and my family to be happy, no matter what happened to him. His funeral.. yeah, I cried, and it was really upsetting, but as per his wishes, it was to celebrate his life, not to mourn his death. So I leave this for anyone to read: Appreciate what makes you happy in life, and treasure it. If or when you lose the things that make you happy.. remember the happiness, and don't wallow in the misery of loss. Never forget, but don't let it bring you down. Live your life looking forward, drawing on the pain and happiness both of your past, allowing it to help you grow. That's what I learned from him, my brother who means so much to me, even now.
