“ Our lives separated by time and space since those summer days in 1965 when we met on a blind date. Not to have our paths cross again until 1989 as I was discovering how to forgive myself and live one day at a time. I remember you gently said, "I think I know you". I'm not sure that I remembered your name, nor you mine but I did remember 209 Emory as we wrote letters for months, maybe longer. You had faith in my journey long before I did but I carried that X chip and ultimately earned it for real. I am grateful for social media for the opportunity to connect once again so many years later so I could hear your voice one last time. I do regret not seeing you when I was there but I have tools to move through that too. I could hear the kindness in your voice, the gentle courage and optimism was present as well. May your light shine even brighter now as all discomfort, pain and fear dissolve as new Life, greater than I can imagine, emerges as your essence. May your acclimation be glorious, swift and ever so Peaceful. May your journey continue to unfold Brilliance, Magnificence and Wholeness. May your family and all those who ever knew you and whoever loved you find comfort knowing that the Love lives on. It lives in each of us whose lives were touched by you no matter how brief the time or how long ago. Soar, my friend! Dance and rejoice.

Jim Gidcomb Jr. I want you to know personally, from me, how much your dad loved you. You know better than anyone how much his private life was just that private. The short time we worked with each other, he spoke very highly of you and your achievements. Having known your dad and the times him and Jr. spent looking after each other, always made him smile and laugh a little. But nothing made him smile like talking about you. It was an honor to have him as a employer and a friend. He left this life to soon yet he did it with great courage and salvation waiting.

“ I lived next door to Jim on Emory street. We grew up hunting and fishing together as kids. We would leave our houses at daylight and not come home until dinner time. Spending the day either hunting or fishing. We new ever square foot of ever forest in a 5 mile radius. Good bye Jim, Pat Pultz.

“ Jim and I were high school classmates, both graduated in 1967. Jim was always a good guy to be around. We served in the Army Reserves together and had some good times together during school and after school. My prayers go out to his family, wishing them comfort in the loss of a fine man and friend.
