“the things i would do to see my dad one more time man. its almost been 2 months n i have never been so broken in my entire life. im not depressed but jus thinking abt me n my dads very little memories. the way he did his hair, the way he wanted me to do his hair as he sat on the couch and we watched my favorite shows, when we were going to sleep in the same bed for the last time, the way he held me and told me he loved me more than anything, the pieces of art he drew me while with me and away from me, how he told me how beautiful i am, how much he wanted to watch me grow up and play basketball, how he would try to do anything jus to make me happy or stop crying, the way he smiled every single time he saw me, how he kissed my cheek every time he had picked me up out of the car, the tiny gifts he gave me tht i would love more than anything to have at this point. there r so many more, but ik we could have made more than we have. even the tiniest things he would do or give me gave me the biggest smile ever. i didnt even know the last time i talked to him would b the last time literally. i never knew how much i needed him in life until now. i feel like he knew how much i loved him or cared abt him, i jus acted like i never wanted to see him again or i didnt love n care for him. but he was the one person i would do anything to see or feel his hug, see his bright smile, hear his voice, or literally just tell him i loved him over the phone for the last time. to take one last picture with him. i didnt believe it was him tht had died until i saw him. laying in the casket with his hands on his side and his favorite hat by his side with a bible. i almost feel like a slight smirk appeared when i looked at him. maybe he was happy to see i was there and that i cared. i know he watches over me but its not the same. u meant the world to me, father.-aaliya

He talked about you to everyone he met, saying how smart and beautiful you are. He often expressed regret that his struggles kept him from being a better father. I'm so sorry for your loss.

“ I miss you so much Shawn! My mind wonders off...and you will always be in my heart, my soul will always be searching for yours. I miss your laugh, your smile and them big ole hugs and a kiss you would give me on my cheek. Your deep blue eyes I looked at every chance I got "I love you Mama"...you'd say. "I love you more son"....I'd say back. "I love you the mostez"...you said back. More recently you said...."I love you more than you know" To think I won't see you here anymore is almost unbearable. I pray and know you are with God and most precious son Jesus Christ and catching up with all the family and smiling so big! I love and miss you! You deserve all the best and finest things. ...so much I think and feel.....

“ From fishing as kids to building dare devil ramps in the yard for our bikes, to trying to teach me how to skateboard with dad, drawing competitions and Kareoke concerts in the back yard. To getting my first pair of vans for my first day of jr high school so I could be “cool and skater” like you. I’ll always remember the long haired blonde skater Shawn Shawn who was sooo cool 😎 I hope you’re having the time of your life up there in heaven & you’re happy and at peace. Love you forever -Jenn Jenn

“ Shawn was not only who I grew up with as a child but someone I grew up with calling my brother and at times my protector. Shawn was such a passionate soul always giving his all in whatever it was he put his mind to. Although we did not always get along like most siblings we were still brothers you couldn't mess with me without dealing with him and the same would go for him he would always stick by my side like I would him. As children we were very competitive with one another whether it be sports like football basketball or seeing who could catch the biggest frog we loved to always out due one another. Our late conversations consisted of how's the family and work and my truck build he listened to my ideas and gave my plenty of insight. I loved to watch him draw the level of skill he had when it came to his art was like no other. I know I will see you again one day and when I do I can't wait to see that smile of yours fly high big bro and know that we are all ok and know that I'll watch over your daughter as if she was my own and if she ever needs me uncle Anthony will always be here for her I've got her now big bro I love you and will miss you and will come see you every chance I have.
